

City Manager

CITY COUNCIL

The 7 members city council make up the legislative branch of government. Those people have the same amount of power as each other. One of the jobs that is the most important is making sloppy copies of laws. They also hire the city manager and approve budgets and contracts. City council makes Westerville a good community.

The current city manager, David Collinworth, has been the city manager for the past ten years. He is not voted in but is hired by the other city council members. His is a full time job. David Collinworth does long term planning. The city manager also oversees the budgets. He is also in charge of 10 departments including Parks and Rec and the Fire Department. David Collinworth is in charge of the day today operations of the city of Westerville.

Boards and Commissions

Boards and Commissions are volunteers so they don't get paid. The city council appoints them. The Boards and Commissions are experts in certain areas. They give advice to city council and any other departments that need it. The members of Shade Tree commission are experts on where to plant trees. The Visitors and Convention Bureau Commission tires to plan fun events. Even though they don't get paid, they try to make Westerville a good place to live.
